CIVIC MEETING TO PLAN
RESIDENT INFILUX DRIVE

The Bay St. Louis Lions Club, at their first regular meeting for January at Hotel Reed, voted to accept a recommendation of the Board of Directors and sponsor a civic meeting of civic-minded people in the Bay St. Louis-Waveland area Monday, January 26, in order to meet a radio station representative from New Orleans and lay plans to bolster the influx of summer residents and permanent residents from the Greater New Orleans Area.

The Lions also voted to sponsor merchants in Bay St. Louis for the Mardi Gras session. The Lions also will issue a challenge to other clubs to sponsor a float in the annual Mardi Gras Parade.

A report of the January meeting of the Board of Directors, held on Friday night at City Hall, was read and approved.

A scheduled showing of a film on polio was cancelled by the Bay St. Louis Infantile Paralysis Committee when the film failed to arrive.

SUGGESTION OFFERED TO ALLOW
SOCIAL SECURITY RECIPIENTS TO EARN MORE MONEY

WASHINGTON—A suggestion that persons over 65 be allowed to earn money without having to give up their monthly social security income was made by Rep. Williams (D-Miss.).

Generally speaking, under present law if a person receiving regular social security payments earns more than $75 a month at some job he must give up his social security income for that month.

There are these exceptions—if the employment is not covered by social security or if the person is over 75.

Williams said he plans to introduce a bill which would abolish this limitation on social security recipients.

"These people are placed in an intolerable situation," Williams told a reporter. "If they work they must give up annuity payments which they have earned and for which they have paid. If they don't work, they are reduced to penance—they can't live on what they get."

Social security payments range from a minimum of $25 monthly to $85 monthly, the average being around $42.

Payments are made to persons who have made regular social security contributions in the form of payroll deductions and who retire upon reaching the age of 65.

Certain types of employment are not covered by social security, although Congress in recent years has extended the act to cover most jobs.

PERIOD OF PRAYER
INAUGURATION DAY

Inauguration Day will be observed in Bay St. Louis churches and schools with prayer.

Churches will be open all day to those who wish to enter and pray for the President and the Nation. There will be a short period of directed prayer in each church, the time of which will be announced from each denominational pulpit next Sunday and which will not conflict with the President's inaugural address.

Both white and negro, protestant and catholic churches are cooperating in this observance which has been promoted by the Bay St. Louis Council of Church Women.

BAY HIGH, CHRIST CHURCH
PTA'S HAVE JOINT MEETING TUESDAY

The Bay High PTA met jointly with the Christ Church Parish School Mothers Club in the Bay High Auditorium Tuesday evening. Mrs. Walter Duququier, president of the Mothers Club, led in prayer to open the meeting after which Francis Greenberg played a piano solo selection, "Variations on an Original Theme" by Brahms.

Mrs. Ernest Smith of the State Health Department discussed the Health Educational Program and the services offered to the school by the State Health Department. She pointed out the physical, social and emotional development and needs of the child at the different age levels. At the conclusion of her talk a movie, "The Social Development of the Child" was shown.

After the meeting, Mrs. Duququier and Mrs. Alice Wallace, president of the Circle Club at Delta Center, were hosts at a social hour. Both were hostesses at a social hour, each group holding separate business sessions.

BESTIKERS

Central America is well worth trying to cultivate. It is adapted to all tropical countries and is being grown extensively in Georgia and Alabama.

Cultivation has been started and is progressing well.

It will yield as much as eight tons of the best hay per acre, or 400 to 600 pounds of best quality hay per ton.

What plans now to set out a small farm? Some stalks to start the new crop. Large areas next year.

The best method of cultivation is the Coastal Barren system of Coastal Barren soils are available in Alabama and Georgia and can be brought back by mail.

A good pasture management job is now required on your setting the roads and fences off.

During January and February is a good time to clear these areas so that you can now, spray them with control and clip pasture.

Remember the dollar invested in this crop will bring back twice as much.

This is a good trade for any farmer. Buy seeds now for spring planting, so that it will be on hand when needed.

SEED SAVING

They and others are two of the easiest and most to store. They, along with other feed crops will be increased in 1953 and some seed are ready to be in short supply. Check with your seed dealer and buy or book your seed early in January and February so you will have them handy when you want to plant.

There are many to be produced in 1953 and you will still have the same old crop to grow. A large number of new seed varieties will be offered this year.

After sowing it is good to practice rainfall.

You have to buy a big growing variety of corn for silage. The best growing varieties make small ears of grain per ear.

Planting on corn for silage makes it more fibrous. It has a big stem and makes high forage per acre.

POULTRY

There is money in poultry, but not in you have a wet chicken house.

Wet chicken house is cold and uncomfortable. It makes for sick birds and dead broilers.

Keep your chicken house dry and warm. Proper winter ventilation will help to keep the house dry and comfortable. You can't afford to let your chickens freeze to death.

If water drops are forming on the roof, add more ventilation. When ventilating your chicken house, always be sure away from the wind. Wind blowing. You need to have a fan in there just enough to move the air around to keep it dry.

When you are raising turkeys, you must have a dry house. If you don't have a dry house, you will lose a lot of turkeys.

CONGRESSIONAL SIDELIGHTS

By Senator W. M. Cohen

THE 81st CONGRESS

As prescribed by the Constitution the 81st Congress convened Jan. 3. While the so-called "smash" election seemed to the constitution writers the closest and most evenly contested since members of Congress who were elected in November continued to serve up to March 1 of the following year. The New Congress was more or less divided, however, between those who favored the fact that the new Congress would be chosen by the people over the executive branch of the Government. The Congress was Republican. (By a slim majority, the Democrats still held the Presidency, the Vice Presidency, and the Cabinet posts.)

The Executive Branch continued to support the motion of running the Government, and President Truman sent his message to Congress on the State of the Union and on the Budget, but the consciousness that Budget, like all other bills, might be set aside or at least changed after January 20, gave all these actions a sort of down-walking, almost nihilistic air of unreality and futility. The approaching inauguration of a Republican President for the first time in 20 years overshadowed all else. The Congress could only proceed with its organization and then mark time until it received the recommendations of the new administration.

RULES

There was a flurry in both Houses over the adoption of rules, provoked in each instance by the advocates of FEPC and other Federal force bills that would invade the rights of individual states.

In the House the CIO sent a letter to each member calling for the adoption of the so-called 21-day rule which prevailed in the 81st Congress but was rejected in the last Congress. This rule permitted the chairman of the House Rules Committee, or incidentally, I have the honor of serving now as the second ranking Democrat in the past, the FEPC and other racial bills, to be blocked by the Rules Committee, to the great irritation of labor organizations. The CIO proposed that the chairman of a standing committee might call up any bill reported favorably by such committee if the Rules Committee did not act upon it within 21 days after it was referred to the Committee.

It was in this way that the FEPC was brought up in the 81st Congress, and while the CIO's letter did not refer to the FEPC bill, it was clear that the bill was designed primarily to promote.

In the Senate a group of 19 Senators under the leadership of Humphrey Bogart, the civil rights advocate of the Southern Civil Rights program and a principal backer of the Moody Resolution, would have read Southern delegations out of the Democratic Convention last fall. Introduced a resolution carrying out a suggestion advanced by CIO President Walter Reuther last year that the Senate was not continuing to do what it should about new rules. In response, Senator Russell, leader of the Southern group, pointed out that this was contrary to the general level of legislation adopted by the Senate over the past 100 years and admitted that the Constitution set up a continuing body by providing that only a third of the members should leave by the election of the next term, the other two-thirds remaining in the next Congress.

The Senate in turn, voted to sustain the CIO's proposal.

The MAN-SIZED car that

WOMEN love to drive

After the fall of Vicksburg, Grant was promoted to the rank of Major General. He was given command of the Army of the Tennessee and was sent to New Orleans on May 25, 1862, which was a severe blow to the Confederacy. The Federal forces had taken over all the major cities on the Mississippi River, and Vicksburg was the last major city still held by the Confederacy.

Grant's first task was to capture Vicksburg. He planned a surprise attack on the city on May 22 and June 18, 1862. Both were failures, and it was decided that Grant would have to wait for the arrival of the battle in order to ensure victory. A joint attack was initiated by Grant and Sherman, but this too was a failure, which must have been extremely discouraging to the Confederate forces.

On January 29, 1863, Grant arrived and took personal command of the Army of Tennessee, encamped 27 miles above Vicksburg. He then made preparations for an attack on the city. This attack also failed, chiefly because the morale of unfamiliar bayous and swamps was a puzzle to the robust Yankees, and because Vicksburg was situated on a high bluff that made direct attack almost impossible without great loss of troops.

In addition to these obstacles, Grant was confronted with the necessity of taking supplies through with a victory or retaining his command. Rather than bow in disgrace, he chose the dangerous expedient of running the fleet past the batteries.

Such a plan meant suffering from a lack of supplies, but it strangely enough proved to be one of the chief factors in the eventual success of the campaign. In a dramatic thrust on April 16, part of the fleet succeeded in getting through, and the rest followed.

The Confederate position was well known. Along each of the six main roads that entered the city, strong fortifications had been erected to seal the approach. The rugged terrain made the Federal advance necessarily slow and tedious.

After five months, the Federal troops lost confidence that another siege would be necessary, but they met with brave and strong defense, and were hurried back. Failing to take the city by storm, Grant decided to withdraw to large operations, which included digging trenches in the main Confederate fortifications in an effort to destroy them by mining.

During all this time, Grant, who already had 15,000 effectives against Pemberton's pitiful 18,000, was receiving steady reinforcements. At the rear the Confederate troops were receiving bombardment from the Federal fleet.

By this time the Confederate troops were decimated, overrun with disease and, with their supplies completely cut off, near starvation. But courageously and emphatically they continued to fight back. Federal thrust and to hold their lines against almost impossible odds for forty-seven days, braving and waiting for the relief from Johnston, which never came.

Five days later, unable to hold out any longer against insurmountable obstacles, the Confederates surrendered on July 4. The Confederacy was divided and the Mississippi was opened through its entire course to Federal control.

Severely berated for surrendering on July 4, Pemberton voluntarily resigned his command and retired to the office of Lieutenant for the remainder of his life.

Such a plan meant suffering from a lack of supplies, but it strangely enough proved to be one of the chief factors in the eventual success of the campaign. In a dramatic thrust on April 16, part of the fleet succeeded in getting through, and the rest followed.

The park is divided with Union Ave. on one side and Confederate Ave. on the other. At one reaches the Confederate side one climbs a steep bank to Observation Tower from which the city of Vicksburg, the river, and all surrounding country may be viewed.

Preparing to leave the park we came upon a monument which was a stone tower 20 feet high, and at least twenty feet square. Beneath it was a plaque which read:

ADMIRAL HORNIGOOD, Commander in the Federal Fleet. Recently, we saluted the staunch young man, one of whose limns was at the same time, aboard a Confederate submarine, and when we left, we saw in the distance down the river, the Vicksburg National Cemetery.

Now I am not an advocate of cemeteries, neither a frequenter of any kind myself; but this particular cemetery filled me with a sort of reverence. Now upon a row of small white crosses stand like silent sentinels along the terraced bluff. Each group of rows represents a company, each cross a young life sacrificed upon the bloody altar of war. Silently and proudly each cross shines in the glinting sun.

A beautiful park—and one unique in that it commemorates the Yankee dead as well as the Rebel. In this battle, brother truly fought against brother—and the "Missouri" monument commemorates both.

Just for a change or something we should like to read about a meeting between political big-shots that was reported as being unhistoric:

Great Year Soon For Chrysler Cars

Chrysler Division will capture its biggest share of the automobile market in history in 1953, predicts J. C. O'Malley, vice president and general sales manager.

"The domestic outlook for 1953 is the brightest in years, even though the post-war period of easy selling and easy financing is over."

"Business won't come knocking at the dealer's door in 1953, but it will come and for those who look for it, the prospect is bright. The people who sell hard will also do well given to them the rewards of big sales."

Construction will be keen if the number of new houses built can be built and O'Malley pointing out the availability of materials and the international situation will have to be considered.

"We have reason to hope that the industry will continue to grow, he is scheduled on the base of public demand," O'Malley said. "There is a growing belief that with the progress we have made, industry, our industry, can build in 1953 the cars we sell without in any way infringing with the requirements of the military. Production in the 5,000,000 plus range can be expected in 1953, much in the interest of exports, the growth of which is still to come, should have no question."

O'Malley also predicted that the 1953 Chrysler production would be the largest in company history. "We have the most product in history. Our cars resulting in more sales, better quality and more profits."

He also predicted that the company would increase its advertising budget in 1953, and that the company would do more to help dealers in their promotional efforts.

Convicts Back To Jail After Christmas Furloughs

PARCHMAN, Miss.—All Mississippi Penitentiary convicts who were given Christmas furloughs have returned here on time, classification officer W. D. Derrick said.

The officer said not a single convict had taken advantage of the furlough either to overstay or attempt to escape.

Thus far 138 men have received 10 day leaves in staggered groups.

Although called Christmas furloughs the leave period began in early December and extends until March 1.

Only a few prisoners whose conduct at the institution has been flawless are permitted leaves.

Derrick said about 40 men have leaves coming up.

A very small turn-over in the Chrysler dealer roster.

"Chrysler dealers, I know, will welcome an actively competitive market," O'Malley said. "It was competition that built our industry and made the automobile the most important piece of machinery and the best value for the money in the entire mechanical field."

O'Malley also predicted that the
